

Cognitive Humanistic Therapy

Buddhism, Christianity and being fully human

USTAKAAN
GIJAPRANATA

RICHARD
NELSON-JONES

SAGE

Contents

Practices	vii
Preface	viii
Part 1: Understanding Being Fully Human	1
1 What is cognitive humanism?	3
2 Human motivation	19
3 Human-being skills	34
4 Being fully human	49
5 Learning and losing humanity	58
Part 2: Cultivating Being Fully Human	75
6 Overview of cognitive humanistic therapy	77
7 The skilled client model	88
8 Calming and disillusioning the mind	105
9 Awakening the heart	121
10 Curbing anger and aversion	135
11 Curbing greed and craving	155
12 Cultivating goodwill, sympathetic joy and gratitude	173
13 Cultivating compassion and equanimity	188

vi Contents

14	Cultivating generosity, helping and service	205
15	Personal practice	221
	Appendix: Some research implications	238
	Bibliography	241
	Name Index	247
	Subject Index	249

Practices

8.1	Mindfulness of breathing	118
8.2	Challenging the illusion of an independent self	118
8.3	Challenging the illusion of permanence	119
8.4	Challenging the illusion of mental efficiency	120
9.1	Contemplating universal sameness	133
9.2	Contemplating human nature	133
10.1	Becoming less prone to anger and aversion	151
10.2	Dealing with a specific anger situation in therapy and self-therapy	152
10.3	Dealing with anger in personal practice	152
11.1	Dealing with greed and craving in therapy and self-therapy	169
11.2	Dealing with greed in personal practice	170
12.1	Cultivating goodwill skills	185
12.2	Cultivating sympathetic joy skills	186
12.3	Cultivating gratitude skills	186
13.1	Cultivating compassion skills	202
13.2	Cultivating equanimity skills	203
14.1	Cultivating generosity and helping skills	219
15.1	Personal practices for becoming and staying more fully human	236