

Series Editors:

Willy A Renandya &

Jack C Richards

RELC Portfolio Series 6

Planning Lessons for a Reading Class

Thomas S. C. Farrell

SEAMEO Regional Language Centre

RELC Portfolio Series

This booklet looks at the teaching and learning of reading. First, it looks at three main models of how reading occurs and then examines what implications these have for learning and teaching reading. Topics discussed in this booklet include, factors to consider when planning a lesson for a reading class, what makes for an interesting reading lesson, how to choose an appropriate passage/text/book, how to deal with vocabulary, how to plan activities, and how to teach reading strategies that students can learn to use for effective comprehension.

Thomas Farrell is an assistant professor in English Language & Literature at the National Institute of Education, Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. As a constructivist teacher-educator, his professional interests include Teacher Education/Development, Reflective Teaching, Teacher Beliefs and TESL Methods.

Table of Contents

Editors' preface	i
Introduction	ii
1. Reading and Lesson Planning	1
What is reading?
Lesson planning
2. Factors to Consider When Planning Reading Lessons	9
Principles for designing effective and interesting reading lessons
3. Teaching Reading	17
Finding a focus to teach
Reading strategies
4. Developing Exercises and Activities to Teach Reading Strategies	24
Activating prior knowledge
Predicting
Skimming
Scanning
Guessing meaning of unknown words
Recognizing text types
Identifying topics and main ideas
Use of questions
Word recognition
5. Conclusion	41
References and Further Reading	42
Appendix 1: Example of Lesson Plan	44
Appendix 2: Reading Passage	46